This is the front.
Cut this square out.

Keep the frame in a position where you as a communication partner can look through the hole to see where the person using eye gazing is looking. Make sure that you don't cover any of the letters with your fingers.

Give the person instructions first to look at the desired letter and then at a frame with the same color as the letter. The speech bubble means the person is finished and wants the messages read out loud. The tick means something went wrong.
